Aims and Outcomes

Educational Aims of the Programme

To enable students to develop an advanced understanding of cutting-edge developments in the fields of criminology and social policy, with a particular focus upon their intersection through the processes of criminalization and the workings of institutions of (in)justice. To enable students to develop a critical awareness of the theoretical and empirical relationships between power and social divisions as they relate to the fields of criminology and social policy. To help students develop a critical understanding of the social, political and historical processes that affect the ways in which crimes and harms are perpetrated and responded to locally, nationally and internationally. To prepare students to develop critical discussion and analysis of complex concepts and to work independently and with some originality. To present students with the opportunity to engage in a sustained piece of in-depth research work which demonstrates an advanced understanding and application of methodology, method and analysis. To enhance the critical, analytic, research and employability skills of students working within or aspiring to work within Criminology and Social Policy related professions.

Learning Outcomes

Code	Description
PLO1	Display a critical awareness of political, historical and geographical dimensions of criminology and social policy as a field of study.
PLO2	Appreciate how diverse audiences and communities engage in the discussion of poverty, social exclusion and crime and how they are responded to at local, regional, national and transnational levels.
PLO3	Demonstrate self-direction and originality of thought in the tackling and solving of problems in creative and innovative ways.
PLO4	Deal with complex issues related to criminology and social policy both systematically and innovatively through sustained research, and communicate conclusions to specialist audiences.
PLO5	Present research findings in an appropriate format to varied and diverse non-specialist audiences.
PLO6	Identify the tensions that exist between the production of theory, research/knowledge and their relevance to policy and practice throughout the criminal justice and welfare systems.

Code	Description
PLO7	Demonstrate a reflexive self-awareness around the transferability of key skills developed through the programme.
PLO8	Self-manage and direct their learning, utilizing effective time-management and strategic planning skills.
PLO9	Work collaboratively and cooperatively as well as to work independently in a productive and effective way.
PLO10	Prioritize time with a view to meeting strict deadlines.
PLO11	Communicate effectively across the verbal, written, and digital realms, with a specific focus upon the needs of diverse audiences.
PLO12	Demonstrate an advanced understanding of debates that inform contemporary criminology and social policy, as well as their national and international policy context(s).
PLO13	Use modern ICT to advance learning and research, as well as effectively communicate their results/findings through digital means.
PLO14	Demonstrate a detailed and critical understanding of the role and contribution of state and non-state actors in shaping national and international policy around crime and social control.
PLO15	Display an ability to reflect critically on the student's independent research study in relation to contemporary criminal justice and social policy practice and policy priorities.
PLO16	Engage critically with theories and concepts outside of, yet relating to, criminology and social policy and put them to productive use in this context.
PLO17	Consider and critically evaluate their own work in a reflexive manner with reference to academic and/or professional issues and debates.
PLO18	Develop substantive and detailed knowledge and understanding in one or more designated areas of the fields of criminology and social policy.
PLO19	Propose, design, conduct and present sustained independent research at an advanced level that will demonstrate a sophisticated understanding of issues related to crime, poverty and (in)justice.
PLO20	Understand the limits of the major research methods employed in the social sciences, and be able to apply this knowledge critically to their own work.

Programme Structure

Programme Structure Description

Students must achieve 180 credits to gain the award of MA in Criminology and Social Policy (60 credits for the Postgraduate Certificate, and 120 to be eligible for the Postgraduate Diploma). Credit will be achieved through undertaking either 7107CSP: Dissertation Module, or 7106CSP: Practice-Based Research Project (60 credits each) alongside both 7100CSP: Advanced Research Methods in Social Science and 7102CSP: Conceptualising Crime, Criminal Justice and Social Policy as core modules (30 credits each). The remaining credit will be achieved through completion of two optional 30 credit modules from a choice of four. In year 1 part time students will study core module 7102CSP Conceptualising Crime, Criminal Justice and Social Policy in Semester 1 and 2 option modules in Semester 2. In year 2 they will study either 7106CSP Practice-Based Research Project or 7107CSP Dissertation over both semesters and the core module 7100CSP Advanced Research Methods in Semester 1.

Teaching, Learning and Assessment

The programme uses a range of techniques to teach and assess the outcomes listed above. This includes the use of a progressive workshop format that incorporates lectures and practical learning tasks designed to enable students to engage critically and directly with the core knowledge that underpins the fields of study they are working within. All modules have a strong interdisciplinary core, and students will be taught to look outside of traditional fields of study throughout the programme. Teaching reflects a strong belief in the value of student-directed learning to develop and enhance practical and professional skills. Structured choice is maintained throughout the programme to facilitate progression, with learning and the development of the practical skills being achieved through enabling students to direct their studies along the lines in which they see themselves progressing professionally and intellectually. Learning on the course is a collaborative and individual endeavour which contains a number of teaching and learning methods that requiring students to 'self-direct' and manage their learning effectively, but there are also elements of group work and research tasks built in to a number of the modules. This is to reflect the importance of working independently as well as collaboratively. Assessment is established by a range different and progressive techniques. This not only facilitates the assessment of the specified learning outcomes above but also those set for each module that the student's pathway through the programme includes. Through the employment of a diverse portfolio of assessment methods across the programme, individual learner needs will be met, and students will benefit from participatory assessment techniques that equip them with multiple practical and transferable skills upon their graduation such as the ability to present ideas/findings in diverse ways to diverse audiences.

Opportunities for work related learning

The programme contains a work placement pathway as part of its core learning provision. It is intended that students either undertake a master's dissertation, or they do a placement research project instead as their 60 credit module. In this way, the programme is able to cater to the needs of students who wish to pursue further studies but with a view to securing employment over and above going on to do a PhD. Placements will be paid or unpaid (so as to enable practitioners to use their current employment if they wish), and managed through the programme team in close collaboration with the school's employability team. For full details, please see the module proforma for 7106CSP: Practice-Based Research Project.
